The victories of Melvin W. Sheppard in the 1,500-meter run and John J. Flandagan in the hammer throw, at the Olympic games, were enthusiastically received in athletic circles in this city. Both atletes are members of the Irish-American Athletic club, and the headquarters of the organization presented a lively appearance last night. The club house was filled and bulletins on the events were eagerly sought. There was no attempt at any celebration in honor of the victories, this being reserved until the members of the club return to New York. The success of Sheppard was particularly well received, as the great miler was known to be pitted against the best distance runners in England, and it was almost conceded that the Britishers would win. Flanagan's vicotry was anticipated and repeated cheers from the members greeted the mention of either athlete's name.
